Review urged for privacy legislation

Annual report out. Privacy commissioner says Saskatchewan lags behind much of the West, highlights absence of laws protecting private-sector workers

MARCO VIGLIOTTI
Metro in Regina

Saskatchewan's privacy commissioner says the province's legislation for privacy and access to government information is antiquated and falls far behind that of some of its western counterparts and most Canadian jurisdictions.

Speaking to the media Monday after releasing his office's annual report, commissioner Gary Dickson said Alberta and British Columbia have enacted legislation providing their residents with 11 "advantages" that are unavailable in Saskatchewan.

One of the most glaring omissions, according to Dickson, is the absence of language in the province's privacy legislation setting forward penalties for those who fail to protect sensitive information.

"In Saskatchewan, there is no duty to protect information," he said, noting this stipulation is a very common clause in most pieces of privacy legislation.

Dickson said people who contact his office are often "astonished" to learn that the province's privacy legislation does not cover private-sector employees, except for those working in federally regulated fields such as banking and interprovincial transportation.

He added that the province should begin a full review of the long-standing Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act (FOIP).

Seemingly heeding this advice, Justice Minister Gord Wyant told reporters later in the day that his office has begun an internal review. He said Dickson's report is a good starting point for substantive discussions about these issues.

"We have been looking at this legislation, we have been doing a review," Wyant said. "What this report focuses on now is the consolidation of recommendations that can enhance that review."

Despite Dickson's criticisms, Wyant said the annual report shows the province is moving in the right direction.

"In his report he does comment, he says things have come a long way in Saskatchewan over the last nine years," Wyant said. "But certainly there's cause to look at some things. Things change and he's identified some areas where we need to look at."

River levels to remain high for up to two weeks: Official

South Saskatchewan River. City, police say swimming and boating prohibited

MORGAN MODJESKI

The Prairie Lily, operated by Shearwater River Cruises, will be docked until river levels return to normal. The city is reinforcing barricades and restricting the public from low-lying areas such as River Landing and the Meewasin Valley Trail near Ravine Drive. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

People are advised to steer clear of the fast-flowing South Saskatchewan River, officials say, as high water levels are expected to remain for at least 10 days.

Bill Coffin, assistant chief of communications and public relations with Saskatoon Fire and Protective Services, says officials are reinforcing barricades to restrict access to low-lying areas.

"We're concerned," Coffin said on Monday. "There's a whole bunch of debris in the water — and we don't want to get anybody getting hung up out there, because we're going to have to send our crews out."

He continued: "If you're near (the river), use extreme caution. But the best advice is to just stay away for now. We're going to be like this for the next 10 days — maybe two weeks."

The high water is having a severe effect on Shearwater River Cruises. The company that operates Saskatoon's Prairie Lily has docked its tour boats and is losing money.

"When the water levels come up like this, we get a lot of debris coming down the river and it makes it dangerous," said Peter Kingsmill, Shearwater River Cruises port captain. "We don't want to damage the vessel by running our propellers into a tree or something."

Debris isn't the only concern as floodwater swamps docks throughout the city.

"We can't even get our passengers on board," he said, "so we're now shut down and we're going day-by-day."

Dan Paulsen, chief of the Saskatoon Fire and Protective Services, said officials are monitoring rivers and working to place barricades at core infrastructure such as water and wastewater-treatment plants.

Miles of smiles on Saskatoon's 'Baby Mile'

Michele Thomas of MD Ambulance says guiding someone through childbirth is "very, very fulfilling." MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

A strip of Highway 16 East near Saskatoon could be renamed the "Baby Mile," after three infants were delivered on the road in the past two and a half months with the help of 911 dispatchers.

According to MD Ambulance, based in Saskatoon, the third baby was born at 5:15 a.m. on Saturday. Ambulance officials say they know of no direct cause for the trend.

"Lately it seems that we are having a lot of babies delivered on the highway or at the homes of the parents. There is no real explanation for it," spokesman Troy Davies said in a release. "We can go up to six (to) eight months with none of these calls taking place, or we can see three in a two-week period.

Special delivery

"It's the most exciting call for any paramedic or dispatcher, as long as everyone is healthy."
Troy Davies, spokesman, MD Ambulance

Michele Thomas, communications supervisor at MD Ambulance, said when people dial 911, they're usually panicked and frightened. But with the recent baby calls, excitement has resonated on the line.

"More often than not, when someone does phone 911 for medical emergencies, they're not pleasant situations and they're very stressful for them," Thomas said. "So, while the delivery of a baby is very stressful, it has a very joyful outcome."

She added: "Instead of having to be there with someone through a loss, we can be there through a very private, personal and exciting time for people. It's very, very fulfilling."

All three of the June births happened a few kilometres east of Clavet, Sask., about 25 kilometres southeast of Saskatoon.

Margaret Atwood touring southwest grasslands

Renowned author and conservationist Margaret Atwood already had her birdwatching binoculars in hand as she left Regina International Airport.

Atwood, along with her husband, author Graeme Gibson, and a group of conservationists from around the world arrived in the Queen City on Monday to prepare for a four-day trek through Saskatchewan's southwestern community pastures to advocate for birds and bird habitat.

"I've never seen the grasslands — never," Atwood said at her first stop of the trip, the First Nations University of Canada. "I have seen other areas and lots of things around the world, but I have never seen that."

The group — members of BirdLife International — is hoping to draw attention to the area's vast grasslands and bird populations. "We are a small group but we connect back to a much larger group, and they are all very interested in the area here," said Atwood, "which is extremely important for grassland and bird conservation, and not very well-known."

Trevor Herriot, co-director of the local advocacy group Public Pastures, Public Interest, is joining the group to highlight the government's recent activities with community pastures.

Though the province has said it will lease the public lands and not sell them, Herriot stressed that his organization doesn't "want a single acre of these precious grasslands to be sold."

Atwood will finish her trip with a gala on Thursday night at the Hotel Saskatchewan, before reporting her findings to the media in Regina on Friday morning.

Province's car insurance rates to see hike on August 31

Vehicle insurance rates in Saskatchewan are on the rise.

The provincial government announced Monday that overall Auto Fund rates will jump by 1.03 per cent, in addition to a 1.23 per cent surcharge on all rates for the next year.

The new rates will take effect on Aug. 31.

Saskatchewan Government Insurance requested the surcharge to last the next three years, in order to help replenish the Rate Stabilization Reserve, according to a press release issued by the province.

However, the Saskatchewan Rate Review Panel has recommended only a one-year term.

Controversial McDonald's location shuts its doors

A McDonald's location at a downtown Saskatoon intersection has closed.

Located at the corner of 22nd Street East and 2nd Avenue North, the eatery has been a subject of controversy. City officials recently voted against removing nearby benches and planters said to be attracting undesirable behaviour, such as loitering and intoxication. Some residents say the restaurant's closure on Sunday will help decrease the problems.

John Gibson, communications manager for McDonald's in Western Canada, said the closure was a business decision and that the 10 to 15 employees who would have worked at a location of that size have been offered comparable hours and shifts at other outlets in the city.

Largest pink palace in province to raise money for cancer research

100% donated. Builder says $1.2-million charity project is a certified Mike Holmes Approved Home

jane.caulfield@metronews.ca

With more than 2,400 sq. feet of bright-pink wood standing tall above the lush grasses of The Willows, it's the largest pink house Saskatchewan has seen. In fact, it's the biggest pink house ever built in Canada.

And the $1.2-million property built by Campbell Custom Houses is being constructed with donated labour, time and materials — with the money earned from the final sale going toward Saskatoon City Hospital's Breast Health Centre.

"It's trades people and suppliers coming together and donating time and material," said Jason Campbell, owner of Campbell Custom Homes. "Any money raised is great … all around. It's just a great project."

The pink colour comes from a special fire-resistant coating applied to the wood.

Last year, Campbell and his crew built the first-ever pink home in Saskatchewan, raising $200,000 for the Breast Health Centre. This time, the team has scored another first, as this will be the province's first-ever Holmes Approved Home — a certification from celebrity contractor and television personality Mike Holmes.

According to Campbell, the certification requires a lot of work.

"It's not just fluff — there's a lot of building codes and higher codes that they want us to input into this home," said Campbell. "I'd like to think that it's encouraging other builders or my competition to build better homes."

The Pink House Campaign, to be launched on Wednesday, will have the house — already on the market — showcased in its pink form before crews begin adding siding of another colour and have it completed in October.

This house, made entirely out of wood with a pink fire-resistant coating, is more than 2,400 sq. feet and worth $1.2 million. The money raised from the sale will be donated to Saskatoon City Hospital's Breast Health Centre. JANE CAULFIELD/METRO

‘Cash cards’ offered to Alberta flood victims

Commuter troubles.
Calgary’s LRT tracks suffer damage ‘never seen’ before, official says

JEREMY NOLAIS AND ROBSON FLETCHER
Metro in Calgary

Alberta’s premier pledged an extra $1 billion Monday on top of $200 million already budgeted for disaster relief as a preliminary source of funds for flood-affected residents across the province.

“I promise you, on behalf of the Government of Alberta, that we will do everything that it takes to ensure that people can rebuild their homes and rebuild their lives and rebuild their communities,” Alison Redford told reporters in Calgary.

Water began spilling over banks in Alberta on Thursday, affecting nearly 30 communities through the weekend and into Monday.

Even as cleanup efforts began, residents in towns such as High River faced uncertainty over when they would be able to return home.

Money for victims will begin flowing to evacuees in a matter of 48 hours in the form of “cash cards” to help people who may have fled their homes without access to banking, Redford said.

She said the government will provide preloaded debit cards to displaced residents to help with their immediate housing needs and day-to-day purchases.

Those who qualify will receive $1,250 per adult and $500 per child.

Federal Immigration Minister Jason Kenney also said the Conservative government was in contact with the insurance industry about damage sustained in the flooding and the hope is companies will respond in “an appropriate way.”

Restoring downtown

Major power grid out until late today

In Calgary focus shifted to restoring the downtown core, but the power grid likely won’t be restored until Tuesday evening, officials said.

Even when work does restart, the city faces the prospect of operating without its south LRT transit line, which sustained damage “never seen” before as water rushed into the city on Friday, said Calgary Transit director Doug Morgan.

As well, two tunnels along the line continue to be partly submerged and must be completely pumped before damage assessments can be done.

Morgan said officials were gunning to reopen the line in time for the start of Calgary Stampede on July 5.

But the lasting effects of damage in smaller communities will be felt much longer, Premier Alison Redford warned. “When we talk about what’s going to happen, we’re talking about a 10-year plan. And we’re committed to make sure that we take that time to do it right.”

Mariner of sunken passenger ferry gets 4 years

Karl Lilgert, navigator of the Queen of the North, leaves the law courts in Vancouver last month. THE CANADIAN PRESS

The mariner who was navigating the Queen of the North passenger ferry when it ran aground and sank off the coast of northern British Columbia, killing two passengers, has been sentenced to four years in prison.

Karl Lilgert, 59, was convicted last month of criminal negligence causing the deaths of Gerald Foisy and Shirley Rosette, who vanished when the Queen of the North missed a routine turn and collided with a remote island in March 2006.

Judge Sunni Stromberg-Stein said Lilgert’s relationship with quartermaster Karen Briker — who was the only other crew member on the bridge when the ship struck land — was a significant factor in the crash.

It was their first time working alone together since their relationship ended several weeks earlier, and the intimate details of the affair were laid bare during the trial.

“Clearly, he was distracted by personal issues related to his relationship with Ms. Briker,” Stromberg-Stein said as she read her sentencing decision on Monday in B.C. Supreme Court.

“I do not need to speculate on what Mr. Lilgert was doing on the bridge that night. I know what he was not doing. He was not doing his job.”

Last week, the Crown recommended a six-year prison term, while the defence asked for a conditional sentence with no time in custody. Lilgert’s lawyer has already indicated that he plans to file an appeal of the conviction.

Data recovered from the ship’s navigation system showed the ferry made no turns and took no evasive action as it approached Gil Island, which one expert witness described as a “catastrophic dereliction of duty.” THE CANADIAN PRESS

Cause?

The Crown alleged Lilgert was distracted, possibly by the presence of Briker. Both Lilgert and Briker insisted there were no hard feelings and that the affair had nothing to do with the sinking. The Crown accused Lilgert, who testified in his own defence, of either arguing with Briker or having sex with her as the ship sailed on its collision course — both of which Lilgert denied.

Seven Conservative MPs are seeking a combined $355,907 from a group of voters who went to court and lost their bid to overturn election results in their federal ridings because of misleading robocalls. A document recently filed in Federal Court says the Tories are asking for a “modest fixed amount” in legal fees plus disbursements.

The Conservative MPs — Joyce Bateman, Kelly Block, Lawrence Toet, Jay Aspin, John Duncan, Ryan Leef and Joe Daniel — say they are asking for far less money than they could have sought.

Poor data-breach tracking reported

Canada’s privacy czar has singled out several federal departments for their lacklustre approach to data breaches, citing a need for better reporting, security and tracking protocols.

Privacy commissioner Jennifer Stoddart’s office has compiled a preliminary list of agencies with potentially worrisome patterns when it comes to the loss of Canadians’ personal information.

The analysis is based on figures tabled in Parliament in April in response to a question from New Democrat MP Charlie Angus. The response indicated there were more than 3,000 data breaches affecting about 725,000 Canadians. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Mormons now knocking on social-media doors

Mormon missionaries will soon spend less time knocking on doors and more time chatting online with potential converts.

Leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints announced the strategy shift Sunday night in Provo, Utah, during a two-hour presentation to mission presidents that was broadcast worldwide.

Church apostles said the change reflects the growing importance of social media and people's preference to connect over sites such as Facebook rather than opening their homes to strangers.

The move is the latest step in the loosening of traditionally strict rules for missionaries. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A six-year-old transgender girl will be able to return to school after winning the right to use the girls' bathroom.

The New York-based Transgender Legal Defence and Education Fund announced the ruling in favour of Coy Mathis on Sunday.

The group filed the complaint on behalf of Kathryn and Jeremy Mathis claiming that the first-grader had been discriminated against at Eagleside Elementary School in Fountain, near Colorado Springs. The Mathises feared going along with the school's order would stigmatize Coy and open her up to bullying. She was homeschooled as the complaint was considered.

School districts in many states, including Colorado, have enacted policies that allow transgender students to use the bathroom of the gender with which they identify. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Mathises said Coy, a triplet, showed an early preference for things associated with girls.

- She showed little interest in toy cars and boy clothes with pictures of sports, monsters and dinosaurs. She refused to leave the house if she had to wear boy clothes and became depressed and withdrawn.
- The Mathises said they decided to help Coy live as a girl and she came out of her shell.

Berlusconi convicted in sex-for-hire trial

Possible end of political career. The former Italian premier, 76, was sentenced to seven years in prison, but plans to appeal

A Milan court on Monday convicted former Italian premier Silvio Berlusconi of paying for sex with an underage prostitute during infamous "bunga bunga" parties at his villa and then using his influence to try to cover it up.

Berlusconi, 76, was sentenced to seven years in prison and barred from public office for life — a sentence that could mean the end of his two-decade political career. However, there are two more levels of appeal before the sentence would become final, a process that can take months.

Berlusconi holds no official post in the current Italian government, but remains influential in the uneasy cross-party coalition that emerged after inconclusive February elections.

Both he and the Moroccan woman at the centre of the scandal have denied ever having sex.

His lawyer, Niccolo Ghedini, immediately announced an appeal and said the sentence was unjust.

"This is beyond reality," Ghedini told reporters outside the courthouse. The sentence was even stiffer than the six-year prison term and lifetime ban on public office that prosecutors had originally requested.

"I'm calm because I've been saying for three years that this trial should never have taken place here," Ghedini said.

The charges against the billionaire media mogul stem from the "bunga bunga" parties in 2010 at his mansion near Milan, where he wined and dined beautiful young women while he was premier. He says the dinner parties were elegant soirees; prosecutors say they were sex-fuelled parties that women were paid to attend.

Neither Berlusconi nor the woman at the centre of the case, Karima el-Mahroug, better known by her nickname Ruby, have testified in this trial. El-Mahroug was called by the defence but failed to show on a couple of occasions, delaying the trial. Berlusconi's team eventually dropped her from the witness list.

Fugitive. The U.S. urges Russia to turn over leaker Snowden, if he's there

The U.S. grasped for help Monday from both adversaries and uneasy allies in an effort to catch fugitive National Security Agency leaker Edward Snowden. The White House demanded that he be denied asylum, blasted China for letting him go and urged Russia to "do the right thing" and send him back to America to face espionage charges.

Snowden was believed to be in Russia, where he fled Sunday after weeks of hiding out in Hong Kong following his disclosure of the broad scope of two highly classified counterterror surveillance programs to two newspapers. The programs collect vast amounts of Americans' phone records and worldwide online data in the name of national security.

Snowden had flown from Hong Kong to Russia, and was expected to fly early Monday to Havana, from where he would continue on to Ecuador, where he has applied for asylum. But he didn't get on that plane and his exact whereabouts were unclear.

The founder of WikiLeaks, the secret-spilling organization that has embraced Snowden, said the American was only passing through Russia on his way to an unnamed destination to avoid the reach of U.S. authorities. Julian Assange said Snowden had applied for asylum in Ecuador, Iceland and possibly other countries.

U.K. Reports cops tried to smear murder victim's family 'horrific': Cameron

"To hear that, potentially, the police that were meant to be helping them were actually undermining them — that's horrific," Cameron said in Downing Street.

Lawrence was stabbed in 1993 and an ensuing inquiry found the Metropolitan Police "institutionally racist" in its response to the killing.

An American executive said Monday he has been held hostage for four days at his medical supply plant in Beijing by scores of workers demanding severance packages like those given to 30 co-workers in a phased-out department.

Chip Starnes, 42, a co-owner of Coral Springs, Fla.-based Specialty Medical Supplies, said local officials had visited the 10-year-old plant on the capital's outskirts and coerced him into signing agreements Saturday to meet the workers' demands even though he sought to make clear that the remaining 100 workers weren't being laid off.

The workers were expecting wire transfers by Tuesday, he said, adding that about 80 of them had been blocking every exit around the clock and depriving him of sleep by shining bright lights and banging on windows of his office. He declined to clarify the amount, saying he wanted to keep it confidential.

"I feel like a trapped animal," Starnes told The Associated Press on Monday from his first-floor office window, while holding onto the window's bars. "I think it's inhumane what is going on right now.... I would never have thought in my wildest imagination something like this would happen."

A young man wearing rainbow suspenders entered the heavily-guarded residence of the United States ambassador to Ivory Coast in Abidjan. So did a transgender woman in a ruffled, purple gown, as well as seven men wearing matching baby blue pants and neckties.

The U.S. embassy in the country made history earlier this month by hosting a gay pride reception attended by about two dozen openly gay Ivorians. Despite the groundbreaking nature of the event, reporters were barred from attending, and the only mention of it was a short blurb on the embassy website posted the following week.

The handling of the event encapsulates the U.S. administration's cautious promotion of gay rights in Africa, an issue that is likely to come up during U.S. President Barack Obama's visit this week to three African nations — South Africa, Senegal and Tanzania — the last two of which punish homosexuality with jail time. The U.S. has made it a priority to promote gay rights overseas, but officials pick and choose when they talk about it, often citing concerns about igniting a backlash that could endanger local activists.

At the reception, Ambassador Philip Carter thanked the guests for their courage in the face of persecution and vowed that the U.S. would continue to advocate on their behalf, according to three Ivorians invited to the event as well as two U.S. diplomats.

Social media. Youth worker handing over his Twitter account to at-risk kids

Over the past two weeks, Mark Cherrington has tweeted about an 11-year-old needle drug user, an 18-year-old girl who broke her neck on a botched suicide attempt and a single mom of five, with another baby on the way.

Cherrington, an Edmonton youth worker, regularly sends hauntingly honest tweets about his job and the high risk kids he works with.

His Twitter account will soon be handed over to some of those youth.

He has come to rely on Twitter as a tool to educate others and advocate for the youth he works with.

Starting Tuesday, some of those kids will have access to his account and password while Cherrington enjoys a 10-day out-of-country vacation.

"This might be brilliantly wonderful or a wonderful disaster," Cherrington said.

It's an experiment he says that was born out of worry.

Cherrington regularly turns to Twitter to ask Edmontonians for help supporting the hundreds of youth he works with.

"Social media, for me, is much more than posting of sunsets and sunrises and half-eaten cakes and status updates."

'Dark day for human rights'

A fifth man who was to be hanged at Benin City Prison was saved when the executioner had technical problems with the gallows, Chino Obiagwu of the national lawyers' rights group LEPAD told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

Amnesty International said the man, identified as Thankgod Ebhos by Obiagwu, is at "imminent risk of execution."

The London-based organization's deputy Africa director, Lucy Freeman, said the hangings would mark "a truly dark day for human rights" in Africa's most populous nation.

HBC eyes Saks Inc. purchase

Department stores.
Retailer is said to be interested in buying prestigious U.S. chain

Department store owner Hudson's Bay Co. is looking to expand its presence in the U.S. with the purchase of high-end retailer Saks Inc., says a source close to the potential deal.

Hudson's Bay has been eyeing the beleaguered American department store chain for the past few months, they said.

HBC is "always looking for stuff like this," said the source Monday, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

"(Chief executive) Richard Baker is always looking to add value and look for growth."

Rumours about Saks being sold to various buyers have circulated for at least a year, according to Morningstar analyst Paul Swinand.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

The source said HBC is looking to buy all 41 department stores under the Saks banner, including the iconic location on New York's Fifth Avenue, which opened in 1924. The stores would also likely stay open under the Saks name.

The source said Hudson's Bay is one of a number of potential buyers vying for Saks, which means that a deal could happen quickly. One of the reported obstacles of the acquisition is the current valuation. "There are other people that are also considering (Saks)," said the source.

HBC declined to comment on the report.

"It would be a good strategic step. It would widen their brand presence obviously and could certainly provide the entry into Canada for Saks."

Design your own doughnut.
Jason Priestley will help judge Tim Hortons contest

Vancouver-born celebrity Jason Priestley will help Tim Hortons pick the winner of a contest it has launched asking Canadians to design a new doughnut.

The competition offers a $10,000 grand prize to the person who designs its next pastry, using a website and Facebook page dubbed Duelling Donuts.

Priestley had a cameo in an episode of the sitcom How I Met Your Mother last February that played on the idea of a Canada obsessed with Tim Hortons.

The episode featured a faux documentary where Priestley bragged about his role in the creation of a new doughnut called the Priestley. Tim Hortons later made the doughnut by stuffing a chocolate Timbit inside a strawberry-vanilla doughnut.

Tim Hortons says it hopes to find similarly original doughnut ideas, asking the public to try to beat the Priestley.

Priestley and a panel of other judges will choose eight finalists from the entry pool, open until July 21, before the public votes on a winner in August. THE CANADIAN PRESS

2 U.S. McDonald's stop selling halal food after lawsuit

The only two McDonald's restaurants in the U.S. that serve food prepared according to Islamic law have stopped doing so.

The company and a Michigan franchise owner agreed to a $700,000 US legal settlement in April after a customer sued.

The firm said the locations in the Detroit suburb of Dearborn, which has a large Muslim population, no longer offer a halal McChicken sandwich or Chicken McNuggets "to focus on our national core menu."

Epidemic of wilderness vandalism plagues U.S. sites

A man slips while going down a waterfall near graffiti-covered rocks at Sapphire Falls in Cucamonga Canyon on Sunday in the Angeles National Forest near Rancho Cucamonga, Calif. In response to massive graffiti vandalism, the city of Rancho Cucamonga is denying access through non-national forest land, actively enforced with $250 US citations. While hikers must now use difficult and dangerous routes on national forest land to reach the popular falls, teams of graffiti vandals continue to spray-paint the area at will. An epidemic of vandalism against natural, archeological and historical sites has also led to the closure of historic Barker Dam and the popular Rattlesnake Canyon hiking area of the Wonderland of Rocks in Joshua Tree National Park.

KIMYE PUT DAUGHTER ON THE MAP

SHE SAYS

Jessica Napier
metronews.ca

Kim Kardashian and Kanye West shocked the world last week when they rejected Kardashian family tradition and decided not to give their daughter a name starting with the letter K. Instead, the new celebrity parents decided to go in a different direction (pardon the pun) and name their baby girl North West — effectively turning the announcement of their newborn into a bad joke.

The directional name might have sent a collective groan through the Interwebs, but it wasn't all that surprising. Kimye are probably the most narcissistic couple on the planet so it makes sense that they would bestow such an attention-grabbing moniker upon their firstborn. Goodness knows that celebrity-baby BFF Blue Ivy wasn't going to be seen hanging out with any ordinary Ava or Olivia.

But this cutesy combination name sounds more like a brand name than a baby. I can picture it now: Bottles of "North" by North West perfume lining shelves alongside Kardashian Kolors nail polish. Or perhaps she'll launch her own line of stylish toddler apparel emblazoned with compasses pointing toward her namesake.

North West may induce a lot of eye-rolling, but I'm on board with the unusual baby-name trend. My own name happens to be the most popular girl's name from the year I was born and I have often cursed my parents for their lack of originality. I was one of six Jessicas in my grade and constantly mistaken for one of the five Jennifers. The only upside of having such a popular name is that I can always find my nameplate key chain at a souvenir shop. The Jolie-Pitt clan would be so jealous.

Commonplace names can leave kids feeling lost in the crowd; however, children with obscure names are an easy target for ridicule. And while school kids may be cruel, the Twitterverse is even worse. North West already has Twitter parody accounts poking fun at her and she's only 10 days old.

She may be the celebrity joke of the month, but Kim and Kanye's kid could inspire a new trend toward directional baby names. Bizarre names are nothing new in Hollywood and occasionally the less radical ones will trickle down to the mainstream. Brooklyn — a relatively uncommon choice when Victoria and David Beckham selected it for their son in 1999 — was the 23rd most popular girl's name in Canada last year. Although, fruit names such as Apple, Clementine and Peaches haven't exactly soared in popularity.

It's hard to say if cardinal points as names will catch on among the general population, but at least little baby North West will never have any issues with people misspelling her name. Unless Kim actually did decide to uphold the Kardashian family tradition and name her "Knorth" with a silent K.

Magician catches a ride on the outside of a bus

British illusionist Dynamo has wowed Londoners by levitating in the air while holding onto the top deck of a 4.57-metre red double-decker bus.

The 30-year-old entertainer — whose real name is Steven Frayne — appeared to use one hand to hold himself in the air. METRO

Q and A

It's 'impossible to explain,' he says

DYNAMO
Real name: Steven Frayne, 30, magician, from Bradford, northern England

Levitating on an iconic London red bus: How did it feel?
It was the best perspective I have ever had of London. I could see all the great landmarks, but at times it was quite scary — the bus had to dodge big branches of trees hanging over the roadside.

How did the public respond on the street? I could imagine a poor old lady getting a big shock ...
(Laughs) No, I don't think so. All I could see were people smiling and waving. I think I'm actually quite popular with the older generation.

Come now, how did you do the trick? It must be a fake arm bolted to the side of the bus ...
No, my arm is really there — and fully intact. And quite frankly it's impossible to explain because it's one of those things where I do what I do and let people come to their own conclusions.

BRENDA STARR/FLICKR

A talent I'm truly envious of is the ability to entertain a room by simply spinning a fine yarn. It's a talent I don't have and I long ago learned to defer to more gifted storytellers, many of whom can be found anchoring these podcasts:

Risk!

A short storytelling podcast with a rotating cast of yarn-spinners, not unlike The Moth. Except completely unlike The Moth in that it's frequently crude, embarrassing and strangely relatable.

True Story

Taking place on a stage of themed dinner parties, True Story tends to be a little more emotionally raw when compared to the antics of Risk!, but that doesn't mean there isn't room for the occasional tale of underwear-related struggles.

On Taking Pictures

It would be unfair to talk about storytelling without mentioning photography, and hosts Jeffery Saddoris and Bill Wadman's thoughts on the philosophy and science behind exploring the world through a lens can be fascinating stuff, even for pocket photographers.

RE: Does Canada Need An Anti-'Revenge Porn' Law? Published online June 24

While it is never OK to post a pic of your ex to a porn site, it would be just so much easier if the pic was never taken! People have to realize that doing something "online" means that you are at the discretion of others, and those others may not be trustworthy.

We shouldn't victim-blame.

The real problem are the people using the personal pics that were sent to them in good faith to act maliciously.

Those are the people that need the lectures ... those are the people that need to be held accountable for their malicious behaviour.

SCENE 2

Everyone gets old

Orson Welles was a handsome 20-something. Marlon Brando was a sex symbol. Time wasn't kind to either. But time has been kind to many of our own era's former hot young actors, who've avoided binge eating, heavy smoking and other vices to keep looking young and fit even as they creep up in age.

MATTHEW PRIGGE
Metro World News in New York

Brad Pitt

Age: 49
First blush: A Robert Redford look-a-like, one of his first prominent jobs was acting for Redford in his A River Runs Through It. That was off the heels of his Thelma and Louise breakthrough, in which a 28-year-old Pitt let Geena Davis massage his six pack. That was over two decades ago.
Today: A special effects team didn't have to work too hard to make him look 20ish late in Benjamin Button.

George Clooney

Age: 52
First blush: The nephew of Rosemary Clooney (and son of AMC charmer Nick Clooney), George was a mulleted himbo on Facts of Life and a scene stealer on Roseanne. It wasn't until E.R., at 33, that he became a sex god. By his 40s he had fully embraced the Cary Grant persona.
Today: Cary Grant retired in his early 60s, as he didn't think the world wished to watch him grow old. Clooney doesn't seem like he'll do the same thing.

Will Smith

Age: 44
First blush: He was that nice kid who made nice raps that your parents would like. Indeed, he's the least threatening person to ever record a song about how parents suck.
Today: He's a dad himself. He's by no means old, nor looks it, but he does have a teenager.

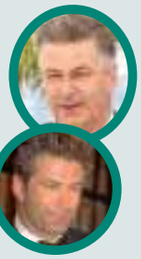
Russell Crowe

Age: 49
First blush: The Aussie didn't completely break through into America until Gladiator at 36. But more adventurous viewers were all about him since he was 26, when he delivered a rollicking performance in 1991's Proof.
Today: Along with Kevin Costner, he's one of Superman's two dads. He's oozed the kind of weary gravitas you get from older, seasoned actors since the start. But now he's really starting to look the part, especially once he started putting on a bit of weight.

Kevin Costner

Age: 58
First blush: At one point, Costner was the biggest star in the world. He got people into multiple films that cracked the three-hour mark, including one fever dream that made up facts to buttress the conspiracy that everybody but Oliver Stone killed Kennedy.
Today: He's Superman's other dad. More important, he's aged into the kind of performer he always wanted to be.

Alec Baldwin



Age: 55
First blush: For more than a decade, Hollywood tried to make the elder Baldwin a slim movie stud. He even got it on in The Getaway with then-wife Kim Basinger, producing scenes too hot for theatrical exhibition.
Today: Like Russell Crowe, he got even better once he put on some weight. In an episode of 30 Rock, Jack Donaghey hands Liz Lemon a photo from his youth. She freaks. He asks for it back. Even older, fatter Alec is into younger, slimmer Alec.

Denzel Washington

Age: 58
First blush: An actor as attractive as he was talented, he was cited in the En Vogue/Salt-n-Pepa song Whatta Man as having the ideal face (though a Schwarzenneger body would have made the package perfect, apparently).
Today: We're just shocked he's nearly 60 years old. Like Pitt, he's got a case of Dick Clarkism.

Michael Douglas

Age: 68
First blush: The son of Hollywood royalty, Douglas was the young co-star of The Streets of San Francisco, but didn't really come into his own until middle age.
Today: Even more shocking than him being nearly 70 is that his dad, Kirk, is still going, at 96. But yes, Michael Douglas is AARP age, and recently did a killer Liberace opposite Matt Damon, who himself is a boyish 42 (playing 18, mind you).

Harrison Ford

Age: 70
First blush: Even before Star Wars, he was a scruffy-looking go-getter, who stole bits of American Graffiti.
Today: He's a first-rate grouch, and as he heads into his 70s he's only going to get grouchier. He was hilariously pissy in Morning Glory and 42, and at some point soon he'll play an old man yelling at kids on his lawn with Clint Eastwood, who right now is 83. But he doesn't look old.

The Incredible Burt Wonderstone

Director. Don Scardino

Stars. Steve Carell, Steve Buscemi, Jim Carrey

No amount of smoke and mirrors can hide the burst seams, frayed wires and bad-hearted humour of The Incredible Burt Wonderstone. Steve Carell, Jim Carrey, Steve Buscemi, Olivia Wilde and James Gandolfini star in this comedy of one-upping Las Vegas magicians, but they aren't given much that's funny or magical to work with. Directed by Don Scardino (TV's 30 Rock) and scripted by Horrible Bosses writers Jonathan Goldstein and John Francis Daley, the movie goes in more directions than a lost white rabbit. It's part laugher, part drama, part romance, part bromance, part comeuppance, part redemption, part nostalgia trip, part social critique, partly sweet, partly gross ... and a whole lot of nothing that really clicks. Extras include deleted and alternate scenes, a gag reel and making-of featurettes.

No

Director. Pablo Larrain

Stars. Gael Garcia Bernal, Alfred Castro

Gael Garcia Bernal plays a Chilean version of Mad Men's advertising ace Don Draper, called upon to sell the "no" side of a national plebiscite that will confirm or topple the dictatorship of General Augusto Pinochet — and the fix for "si" is likely already in. Based on real events of 1988, Pablo Larrain's tightly framed film is a mesmerizing, realistic and often hilarious look at the cynical politics of power and the magic required to sell a negative as a positive. Say yes to No. Extras include a commentary with Gael Garcia Bernal and Larrain.

Carrey doesn't think his new film is Kick-Ass

Jim Carrey is publicly distancing himself from his upcoming super-violent comic book film, Kick-Ass 2 in light of his recent anti-gun stance. "I did Kick-Ass a month (before) Sandy Hook and now in good conscience I cannot support that level of violence," Carrey posted to Twitter, referencing the Newtown, Conn., elementary school shooting that left 26 dead. "My apologies to others (involved) with the film. I am not ashamed of it, but recent events have caused a change in my heart."

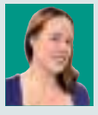
George Lucas married Mellody Hobson in Marin County, Calif., according to People magazine. The ceremony, which was officiated by Bill Moyers, took place on the Star Wars mogul's Skywalker Ranch. Lucas and Hobson began dating in 2006 and were engaged in January. He was previously married to film editor Marcia Lucas from 1969 to 1983.

The Word

At least Kanye and Kim's daughter has some direction



THE WORD
Dorothy Robinson
scene@metronews.ca

So there is an actual sane reasoning behind Kanye West and Kim Kardashian naming their daughter North West.

A report from TMZ says that Kim and Kanye believe North is "their highest point together as a couple... the pinnacle of the relationship... and they consider her their 'North Star.'"

That is adorable. But didn't they factor West's last name into this decision?

That she is going to sound like a direction for her entire life?

Where is the explanation for that?

Justin Bieber

Lots of love between Biebs and his manager

Justin Bieber's slew of headline-grabbing antics reportedly have his longtime manager Scooter Braun considering desperate measures to fix the situation — like sending Bieber to rehab, according to Radar Online. "His partying is creating problems. Scooter is very worried about him," a source says. "Scooter wants him to go to rehab to get his act together. Justin needs to get away from the bad influences in his life." Looking to combat rumours that there might be any tension between them, Bieber and Braun posted an Instagram video of them embracing to the strains of I Will Always Love You.

Will Smith

Independence Day sequel won't have Will Smith

Nearly 20 years after its blockbuster release, Independence Day is officially getting a sequel — but Will Smith won't be in it, according to the New York Daily News. Director Roland Emmerich says the followup to the 1996 alien invasion hit will make its way to theatres in the summer of 2015 but without the original film's star. "Will Smith cannot come back because he's too expensive, but he'd also be too much of a marquee name," Emmerich says.

Solving beach-body blahs

Tony Martinez, Britney Spears' trainer, offers five super simple moves to help you fix some common issues

ROMINA MCGUINNESS

I have a tummy roll and back fat

Do side-to-side mountain climbers
Get into it: Start off in plank (elbows and knees on the ground, hands locked together. Straighten your legs and raise your body, using the balls of your feet for support and keeping your legs hip-distance apart). Bring your right knee to your left elbow, go back and immediately switch sides, bringing your left knee to your right elbow. Staying in plank, shuffle to the left and repeat the exercise. Now shuffle to the right and repeat. Do 10 reps, two to three sets, two to three times a week.
Benefits: Crunches work the core, but add an element of cardio to your strength training, to shave off fat.

My thighs touch and get sandy, giving me a rash.

Do side-to side-lunges
Get into it: Stand with your feet parallel and hip-with apart. Lean to the right side, touch your ankle for 1 second and come right back up. Now lean to the left, touch your ankle and come back up. Do 10 reps, two to three sets, two to three times a week. Have no more than a 15-second rest between each set.
Benefits: This move will help shape, tone and tighten the inner and outer thighs as well as the hips and glutes.

My arms jiggle.

Do a one-arm bicep curl followed by a one-arm tricep kickback
Get into it: Grab a resistance band. Stand with your legs hip-width apart. Stand on one end of the band with your right foot and grab the other end with your right hand. Place that hand on your thigh. Lift your left leg off the ground so that you're balancing on the right leg. Turn your right wrist in and curl your hand in toward your right shoulder. Now bend your knee 30 degrees and bring your right arm back, almost like you're swinging a hammer behind you. Bring yourself back to standing. Repeat on the left side. Do 10 reps on each side, two to three sets, two to three times a week
Benefits: This shapes and strengthens the bicep and tricep muscles, making your arms look lean.

I have a flat, saggy bum.

Do bear crawl butt squeezes
Get into it: When we walk, we always go forward. So let's try going backwards. Get yourself in a push up position. Lift the right leg up and, pulse it five times. Now take two steps (or hops) back. Pulse that leg five more times and once again, step or hop back two steps. Do five sets of five pulses (hopping/stepping back between each series of pulses) before switching to the left side. Do 10 reps (five on each leg), three sets, two to three times a week.
Benefits: This will firm and tighten your bum by firing up your glutes.

Smart nutrition

What to eat

If you want to lose a few pounds fast, lower your portion size and include protein. "Protein makes you feel fuller and helps you generate lean muscle mass," explains Martinez.

Man boobs

Do chest presses
Get into it: Grab a resistance band. Fix it under a door. Hold the band with both hands, holding your arms up in a 'W' position. Balancing on your right leg only (you want to stand in a flamingo position), bring your right arm out at a 45-degree angle and then bring it back in. Switch sides. Do 15 reps, two to three sets, two to three times a week
Benefits: No man boobs.

The water baby

Are you intending to spend your summer submerged in the sea? Then take heed of the old adage, "Water water everywhere but not a drop to drink." The saying rings true for your hair and skin, too. Salt and chlorine can strip your skin of much-needed moisture, leaving your body feeling parched. The chelator, babassu and tamanu oils in Aveda's Sun Care Hair and Body Cleanser help remove water nasties, while restoring and protecting moisture balance.

The adventurer

If you're the kind of chap who likes to feel the burn (muscles not skin) during your summer hols, this product is for you. Unlike conventional SPF creams, which tend to streak away while you sweat, Kiehl's Cross-Terrain Face Protector has a solid beeswax texture designed to sink into skin, to keep wind and sun damage at bay.

While there can be no greater pleasure than a nice long lie-down in the sun, punctuated with a cooling dip in the sea, it does have its obvious dangers. Shiseido's Ultimate Sun Protection Lotion+ SPF 50 claims to prevent sun spots by shielding the inner cells and DNA. On top of that, it's also water-resistant for 80 minutes, meaning fewer re-applications.

Choosing sunglasses is serious business. ISTOCK PHOTOS

Don't be shady, wear the right sunglasses

Eye care. It's not just about what looks good — make sure your sun protection is actually protecting you

When it comes to eye health, most damage comes from UV light. During summertime, when we spend more time outside, the risk greatly increases.

"Sunlight literally cooks the retina," says optometrist Dr. Rupe Hansra, LensCrafters' senior director of eye care. "Over time, it becomes yellow and hard, and we begin to lose good vision."

Wearing sunglasses year-round protects the retina from damaging UVA and UVB light and can help delay the onset of cataracts, macular degeneration and even basal cell carcinomas on the eyelids.

Need to know

Getting pupil pointers

- Report. A report from the Healing The Eye and Wellness Center in Florida said that sunglasses harm vision by interfering with pupil dilation, which happens naturally to protect the macula. But you shouldn't worry, Dr. Hansra says. "As long as you have sunglasses with UV 400 protection, pupil dilation isn't a concern."

"The most common part of the body for skin cancer is the tip of the nose," Hansra says. "The second is the lower eyelid, which is very delicate and susceptible to sun damage."

So how do you choose a good pair? Here are Hansra's tips.

Just like sunscreen, look for a number

"For eye protection, a label that says UV 400 is what people should look for on sunglasses," he says.

Not sure about your glasses' protection level? Your local optometrist can test the UV prescription.

Size counts

"Typically, bigger is better. Choose large sunglasses that wrap around and block extraneous light coming from the side."

Get 'em polarized

"For driving, everyone should wear polarized sunglasses to cut down glare, which is related to so many accidents. Polarized sunglasses not only save your eyes but could save your life, too." METRO

Play the role of BBQ hero with a Smoked Pork Tenderloin

1. Pre-heat barbecue to high. Place pork on plate, cover with plastic wrap and let sit 20 mins.

2. Meanwhile, drain water from wood chips. Place soaked wood chips on 2-ft (.60 metres) piece of heavy duty foil. Wrap to make packet; with tip of knife, poke 8 holes. Place on rocks in barbecue; close lid and let smoke develop, 15 mins.

3. Brush tenderloins with oil; season with salt, pepper. Lower heat to medium. Grill covered, rotating pork on all 4 sides, until juices run clear when pork is pierced and just a hint of pink remains, about 25 mins or until meat thermometer registers 165 F (74 C). Remove to clean plate, loosely cover with foil; let rest before slicing.

4. Fontina Cheese Sauce: Preheat saucepan to medium-low heat. Add 3 tbsp (45 ml) butter and garlic; sauté 4 mins. or until golden brown. Add wine, 4 basil leaves and bay leaf; increase heat to medium-high and cook until reduced to 1/2 cup (125 ml), about 20 mins.

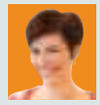
Sumac: Not just for shade



NUTRI-BITES
Theresa Albert

myfriendinfood.com

You get a flat tire on your way up to the cottage so you pull over, call for help and sit under a sumac.

Don't just sit there, do something! Ripe red sumac is one of the healthiest wild plants in the country. You are sitting under it for shade, you may as well sample.

Never gather white drupes (the clusters that look a bit grape like). You want the ripe berry red ones.

• Use them to make a drink called "sumac-ade," "Indian lemonade" or "rhus juice." It is a very lemony beverage made by soaking the drupes in cool water, rubbing them to extract the flavour and then straining the liquid through a cotton cloth. Some like to stir in a bit of sugar or honey to sweeten.

• Sprinkle some of the lemony liquid in salads for added ORAC. (The measurement of anti-oxidant power in foods is called Oxygen Radical Absorbency Capacity or ORAC.)

• Dry them in the sun and grind them into a spice as in Middle Eastern cuisine.

Rethink classic Surf and Turf

1. To marinate steak, place in nonreactive baking dish. Drizzle lime juice and olive oil over both sides, then season liberally with salt and pepper. Rub seasonings in, then cover and refrigerate.

2. To prepare ceviche, bring saucepan of salted water to a boil. Have bowl of ice water nearby. Add shrimp to boiling water and poach 30 seconds, then use slotted spoon to transfer to ice water. Once shrimp have completely cooled, use the slotted spoon to transfer them to a kitchen towel to dry.

3. Meanwhile, in medium bowl stir lime juice, red onion, garlic, hot pepper, cucumber and corn. Taste, then season with salt and pepper. Add shrimp and salmon, and mix. Cover and refrigerate for 1 hour.

4. After ceviche has chilled for an hour, remove the steak from the refrigerator and let stand at room temperature. Meanwhile, heat the grill to high.

5. Remove ceviche from the refrigerator and stir in the cilantro and avocado. Taste and adjust seasonings.

6. Using oil-soaked paper towel held with tongs, oil grill grates. Season steak with additional pepper, then grill 5 minutes per side for medium-rare. Transfer steak to cutting board and let rest 5 minutes. Cut steak into thin slices across the grain. Divide sliced steak between serving plates, then spoon ceviche over each serving. The one and only! No siblings? No problems

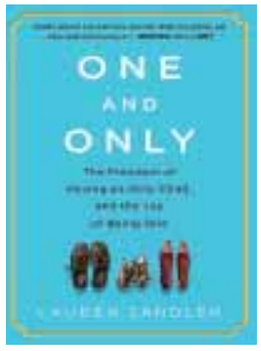
Non-fiction. Those stereotypes of only children are totally untrue, says author Lauren Sandler

DOROTHY ROBINSON
Metro World News from New York City



Pity the poor only child. The eldest child is never stereotyped as spoiled; the youngest is never pigeonholed as maladjusted or lonely. Forget giving birth to a small army — it is when you say you are only having one child that eyebrows get raised.

Lauren Sandler is on a mission to change these misconceptions of onlies with her new book, One and Only: The Freedom of Having an Only Child, and the Joy of Being One. Sandler, who is an only child and has an only child herself, found herself being a de facto proponent of stopping after one.

"One day, I got an email from a friend that said, 'I'm pregnant with my second child, and I know how you feel about this.' And I thought, 'I don't know how I feel,'" recalls Sandler, a journalist who writes on cultural politics and women's issues. "Her comment sat with me in a funny way. Then, when I had my child and I was wrestling with what it would mean to not have another, I decided to report it out, like I do for everything."

What Sandler found was "stunning": "Hundreds of studies over decades found that our stereotype of lonely children is totally untrue," she says.

Filled with in-depth reporting (with some wry motherhood observations thrown in), One and Only lays it out there: If you decide to only have one child, you aren't "ruining" that child by deciding not to give him or her a brother or sister. You may just create a happier family life because of it.

Sandler is quick to note that she's not saying that having one is the best choice; only that it is a valid choice, and one that parents don't think they can make without seeming selfish or withholding.

"If most people have their first kid for them, and their second kid for their first kid — which is what polls have consistently told us they do — what would it mean if they didn't feel like they had to?" she asks. "Don't have another kid just because you think you're gonna avoid screwing up your first kid if you do."

The good news about only children

Research. In 500 studies over the past several decades, examining 16 traits including leadership, maturity, extraversion, social participation, peer popularity, generosity, co-operativeness, flexibility, emotional stability and contentment, only children do just as well as siblings.

Motherhood takes some juggling:

- Each child adds no less than 120 hours of housework a year.
- Women devote about 13 hours a week to childcare, up from about 10.5 hours nearly a half century ago. Meanwhile, the American workweek has increased by 13 hours.
- A single child decreases a mother's employment by about eight hours a week. A second child leads to a further reduction of about 12 hours (to a total of 20).
- Sixty per cent of men say they are struggling with the demands of work and family.

The financial reality:

- A child born in 2011 will cost an average of $235,000 to raise to age 18.

BRUSH UP ON DENTAL HEALTH

We make sure to brush our teeth daily — but how about our dogs?

"Dental care is important for dogs — at least 85 per cent of pets experience periodontal (gum) disease," says Dr. Sharon French, a veterinary dentist at the Veterinary Emergency Clinics in Toronto and a Fellow of the Academy of Veterinary Dentistry. "They suffer in silence and, often, we don't realize they are in pain until it becomes a very big problem.

"The classic signs of oral disease are a reluctance to chew hard things, chewing treats or dry food more slowly, bad breath, drooling, a reluctance to yawn, pawing at the mouth and, sometimes, weight loss."

One good way to ensure your dog's mouth stays healthy is daily brushing. Occasional brushing is actually counterproductive because "it smoothes tarter, making it more difficult to remove. And if your dog's mouth is sore, it will make him reluctant to have his teeth brushed," French says.

Also, regular veterinary checkups will ensure that your dog's mouth is healthy. Even if you brush your dog's teeth regularly, your vet may recommend scaling under anaesthesia to properly and effectively clean all the teeth. Like humans, dogs occasionally need professional cleaning for their teeth. Unlike humans, however, it isn't possible to do the job properly without anaesthesia.

"While it may be possible to remove some tartar buildup on the outside surfaces, it isn't possible to effectively clean and polish areas below the gum line or on the inside of the teeth," French says. "And pet owners shouldn't try and scale the teeth themselves. Besides possibly injuring your dog, without polishing, scaling can leave grooves for tartar to build up more quickly."

There are foods, mouthwashes, treats, brushes and toothpaste designed to help keep your dog's teeth clean and gums healthy. Depending on your dog's oral health, general health and personality (i.e., whether it squirms or relaxes when you attempt to brush), your vet can recommend the right products to help you keep your dog's teeth and gums healthy and its breath fresh.

DOGS CAN, AND WILL, EAT ANYTHING AROUND

Most dogs love to eat — but what they eat may sometimes seem a little odd to their human caregivers.

Here is a quick summary of what it means when your dog eats the following:

GRASS

"Especially in spring and summer when the grass is fresh, grass tastes good to dogs," says Dr. Barb Bryer, head of emergency at the Veterinary Emergency Clinics in Toronto. Usually this is pretty safe, unless the grass has recently been sprayed with a chemical like a pesticide.

"Sometimes if the grass doesn't agree with a dog, she'll throw it up. And, sometimes, dogs eat grass when they feel nauseous to promote vomiting."

In summation, if your dog loves grass, that's fine. If its reaction to eating grass it to vomit, that's probably OK. But if it continues, better see your vet.

AVAVA/VEER

GARBAGE

In summer, garbage rots faster and smells particularly strong — this attracts dogs to eat garbage even more. Coffee grounds, onions, garlic, chocolate, plastic and bones are just a few of the harmful things that can make your dog sick.

"Gastroenteritis — diarrhea and vomiting — is a common side-effect of eating garbage," Bryer says. "Also, mould from garbage can have toxins that can cause dogs to have tremors or even seizures."

TABLE SCRAPS

Most dogs love to eat food off your table.

"Dogs like the taste and the variety — but they also see table scraps as treats because of the manner in which we give them," Bryer says.

This can lead to bad habits and it may be unhealthy for your dog, based on its age, weight and health considerations.

WHAT ABOUT PICKY EATERS?

Like humans, some dogs are just finicky when it comes to food. Some dogs are not gobblers, but grazers. If that's the case with your dog, it is nothing to worry about.

However, if your dog suddenly goes off food, this can be a signal of a health or dental issue. See your veterinarian.

YOUR MONEY
Alison Griffiths

Whether you call it a yard, junk or garage sale, the aim is to pad the pocketbook while creating badly needed space in your home. Summer is a great time to capture all those garage sale lovers, but you have to do it right or you'll spend tons of time with little to show for it.

Here are some tips to ensure your pop-up shop on the curb is a success.

1. Advertise it
Tacking a sign on a nearby telephone pole just won't cut it any more.

Craigslist, Kijiji, Facebook and the local newspapers are all good options. Make sure any signs are legible with a directional arrow. One person posted about her very successful sale and noted she put well-lit pictures on Instagram. This is especially valuable for furniture, which can be a hard sell curbside.

Certain key words draw the weekend bargain shopper such as antique, mid-century, jewelry, high end and collectible. Other desired items include baby things, quality toys and sports equipment.

Avoid long weekends, if you can, as towns and cities often empty out for the duration.

2. Stage it
A dreary layout of old clothes on the lawn and toys scattered along the driveway are hardly a draw. If your offerings look sad, messy and cheap you won't attract flies. Organize by theme so people don't have to pick through all the household stuff when they are looking for sports equipment.

Place desirable and easily seen items, such as furniture or large funky collectibles, closest to the road. And don't ignore colour. Cheerful and bright will appeal. At the very least, shell out for some colourful balloons.

3. Clean it
Items will move quicker if they are clean. People might buy dusty teacups, but dirty clothes and rusty tools are a different matter.

4. Price well
Start with 40 per cent of retail for like-new and 20 to 25 per cent for well-used. Include the original price if you can.

5. Use bait
Include (and advertise) a free pile and if yours seems insignificant let the neighbours know. It'll save them gas money driving to Goodwill. Place the pile, marked by balloons in a visible location.

Laugh in the face of volatility with these tips

Ask any financial advisor and they'll tell you that it's never too early to create a solid financial plan, regardless of whether you're in your 20s, 30s, or even 40s.

The idea is to set the plan in motion. But after the market instability of the last several years, many people remain uneasy. What's the best way to give your money a chance to grow?

The experts from Desjardins Group suggest that while there are risks associated with investing, they are manageable if you know how to overcome potential setbacks.

What's your biggest risk? Volatility
This is caused by market fluctuations. For example, volatility is caused when prices on the market swing high and then low in quick succession.

During these periods, the strong upturns followed by strong downturns sometimes lead to short-term gains or losses in your investments. By talking to a qualified financial advisor, you can identify your risk tolerance and invest in suitable financial products that will grow your capital even in periods of high volatility.

Setting your priorities
Start by being honest with yourself. Are you carrying too much debt? Would you have cash on hand in case of emergency? Having the full picture of your financial situation will put you in a better position to achieve your goals.

Become a super-saver
Get into the habit of forcing yourself to save. While this takes discipline at first, you'll appreciate the effort you put in when an emergency arises like an illness, accident or a job loss. Usually, a good emergency fund is the equivalent of three months' worth of living expenses.

Begin by saving the equivalent of one month's groceries. With each paycheque, put aside one to 10 per cent into a separate account — like a TFSA. And remember: it's more important that you're saving than the total amount that you're saving each month.

Time's on your side
The impact of volatility on your savings depends on your investment horizon. In other words: the longer you have to invest, the more likely you'll be protected from market shifts, which will allow you to save more.

So it's important to stay on course — no matter what the market is doing. With proper planning, you have reasonable assurance that you can achieve your goals over the target period, despite occasional market downturns.

Diversification
Basically, it's all about making sure that your investments are well balanced to protect yourself against volatility.

With an advisor's help, look into savings products that offer protection against volatility.

NHL. Pair of goals in dying minutes gives Chicago second championship in 4 years

Game 6

Blackhawks	Bruins

Bryan Bickell and Dave Bolland scored goals 17 seconds apart late in the third period Monday night to give the Chicago Blackhawks the Stanley Cup in an amazing 3-2 last-minute comeback win over Boston in Game 6.

Milan Lucic's third-period goal had seemed to give the Bruins a 2-1 victory and a new lease on life in the final.

But with Chicago goalie Corey Crawford out for an extra attacker, Bickell scored at 18:44 after the Bruins failed to get the puck out of the zone.

Bolland then put them ahead at 19:01, stunning the Bruins and the crowd at TD Garden.

Jonathan Toews, reduced to a spectator in the final minutes of Game 5, added a goal and an assist for Chicago as the Blackhawks clawed their way back into the game. He was the first to hoist the cup as his teammates jumped up and down.

Crawford finished with 23 saves in the victory that marked Chicago's fifth championship and second in four years.

Chris Kelly had the other goal for Boston, while Tuukka Rask made 28 saves.

Lucic had taken advantage of a Crawford handling error behind the goal to give the Bruins a 2-1 lead at 12:11. The bruising forward disrupted the Chicago goalie and when the puck came back in front of the net from David Krejci in the corner, Lucic wristed it in. Linemate Nathan Horton did his bit in front of the goal to complicate things for Chicago.

The Blackhawks' Patrick Kane won the Conn Smythe trophy as the playoffs MVP.

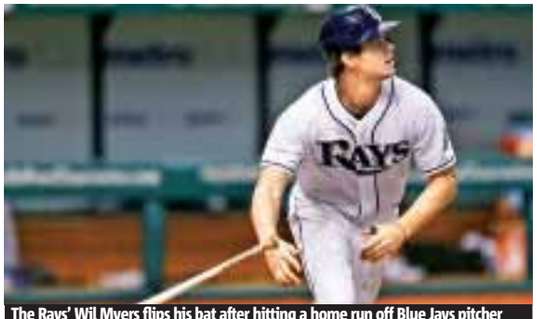
Rays sever Jays' win streak at 11 games



The Rays' Wil Myers flips his bat after hitting a home run off Blue Jays pitcher Esmil Rogers on Monday in St. Petersburg, Fla. CHRIS O'MEARA/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jeremy Hellickson allowed one hit in seven shutout innings and rookie Wil Myers homered in his home debut, helping the Tampa Bay Rays beat the Blue Jays 4-1 on Monday night to end Toronto's 11-game winning streak.

Myers hit the second of three straight Tampa Bay homers in the second, connecting in his first at-bat at Tropicana Field. He received a standing ovation from a crowd of 11,407 getting its initial close-up view of the key acquisition in the off-season trade that sent pitchers James Shields and Wade Davis to Kansas City for the power-hitting right fielder and other prospects.

Myers' drive to centre off Esmil Rogers (3-3) was sandwiched between home runs by James Loney and Sam Fuld as Tampa Bay went deep three times within a span of eight pitches. Luke Scott added a bloop RBI double to make it 4-0 in the third, and that was all the support Hellickson needed.

A night after scoring a season-high 13 runs at home to complete a three-game sweep of Baltimore, the Blue Jays were limited to four singles and five walks. They came up short in their bid to extend the longest winning streak in the majors since Detroit won 12 straight in 2011.

Hellickson (6-3) gave up J.P. Arencibia's single, walked four and struck out four. He allowed only one runner past first base — in the second inning, when Colby Rasmus walked and moved to third when Arencibia followed with his hit to centre field.

Riders not dwelling on November

CFL. Coach Chamblin shrugs off hometown advantage after hosts' recent Grey Cup wins in Vancouver and Toronto

Hosting the Grey Cup game was often the kiss of death for CFL teams.

Prior to 2011, only three clubs had ever won it as the host city — the 1994 B.C. Lions, '77 Montreal Alouettes and '72 Hamilton Tiger-Cats. But B.C. and Toronto bucked tradition with Grey Cup victories at home the past two seasons.

This year's Grey Cup goes Nov. 24 at Mosaic Stadium. But recent history hasn't convinced Roughriders head coach Corey Chamblin that his team is destined to reap the benefits of a host-city advantage.

"If it was guaranteed like that, then I'd start playing the 6-49 and find a pattern there," Chamblin said with a chuckle. "If I had to put a percentage on it, I'd say I've thought about that maybe one per cent.

War for the West

Getting out of the West Division won't be easy for the Riders as B.C. (league-best 13-5 record last year) and Calgary (defending conference champions) both look strong.

- New Edmonton GM Ed Hervey takes over a team that made the playoffs last year despite a 7-11 record.

"I honestly think it just happens that way, I don't think guys play with any extra juice or anything like that. Now, it would be great being at our house but I don't think about what's happened the last two years."

The 2013 season kicks off Thursday night with Winnipeg hosting Montreal in the first-ever regular-season game at Investors Group Field.

Hamilton visits Toronto on Friday before B.C. kicks off in Calgary later in the evening.

Edmonton hosts Saskatchewan on Saturday to cap opening week.

Saskatchewan head coach Corey Chamblin will have plenty of new weapons to utilize when the Riders' regular season gets underway on Saturday in Edmonton. LIAM RICHARDS/THE CANADIAN PRESS

The Riders last won the Grey Cup in 2007 and came agonizingly close in 2009 when Damon Duval's 33-yard field goal on the final play earned Montreal a 28-27 win. Duval had missed from 43 yards out to seemingly give the Riders a 27-25 win, but a too many men penalty gave Duval a reprieve from 10 yards closer.

The Riders will look to improve last year's 8-10 record that left them third in the conference before losing 36-30 in the semifinal to Calgary. GM Brendan Taman had a busy off-season, signing defensive back Dwight Anderson, linebackers Rey Williams and Tristan Black and defensive linemen John Chick and Ricky Foley as free agents while trading for defensive lineman Jermaine McElveen. But his biggest move was acquiring slotback Geroy Simon from B.C., the CFL's all-time receiving yards leader.

"There's definitely a sense of excitement around here with all the additions that have been made," said Foley, the top Canadian in Toronto's 35-22 win over Calgary in the 100th Grey Cup last year. "As a veteran, I know you don't win the Grey Cup on paper and every team made moves in the off-season to put themselves in a position to win it."

Saskatchewan is counting on the 37-year-old Simon returning to form and taking some heat off speedy Weston Dressler.

"Obviously, his on-field play speaks for itself," said Taman. "His value to our team on and off the field is going to be immense.

"Geroy's got some points to prove to a lot of people he still can play so I think there's a lot of bonuses to doing it."

Options to work with

"If I was a position coach, I'd just take the younger guy because I'd want to mould him my way. But as far as being a head coach, you've got to have a balance of both."

Riders head coach Corey Chamblin, on incorporating new acquisition Geroy Simon into the offence.

Father Chamblin ready for real games to begin

Corey Chamblin had two reasons to smile Monday.

The first was the completion of training camp and finally being able prepare for a new CFL season. But more importantly for the Saskatchewan Roughriders head coach, his wife Samantha delivered the couple's second son, Keaton Jermaine.

The newest addition showed good timing as he was born at 9:15 a.m. local time and on a day with no practice as Riders players had Monday off.

"We did some game-planning (Sunday) so the coaches finished up the game plan and practice schedule and things like that without me so it was pretty good," Chamblin said.

Although there was no practice, the Riders were busy Monday preparing for Saturday's season opener in Edmonton. The club finalized its practice roster, placed veteran fullback Neal Hughes, receiver Kierrie Johnson and linebacker Abraham Kromah on the one-game injured list and defensive back Milt Collins (wrist) and receiver Aaron Hargreaves (Achilles) on the nine-game injured list.

Saskatchewan will begin the season with eight players hurt.

Collins and Hargreaves join fullback Graeme Bell, linebacker Mike McCullough and offensive lineman Patrick Neufeld on the nine-game injured list

When the Riders face Edmonton, they'll also be minus defensive lineman Tearrius George. He received a one-game suspension from the CFL for a helmet-to-helmet hit on Calgary quarterback Drew Tate in last year's West semifinal.

Veteran slotback Geroy Simon received treatment Saturday for a leg injury but remains on the active roster. The injury isn't considered serious but Chamblin said he wasn't sure about Simon's status.

"I'll know more (Tuesday)," Chamblin said.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Kick it!

Training camp is often a whirlwind for CFL coaches, who have roughly three weeks to install schemes and evaluate a myriad of players with just two exhibition games.

- But for Corey Chamblin, the start of the season comes at the right time.
- "It really does," he said. "In terms of preparation you'd always want to do more. But sometimes as coaches you out-think yourself and sometimes with a longer pre-season you lose half your team and you're waiting for them to come back."

Horoscopes

♈ Aries

A quick decision on your part could lead to unexpected gains today, so be decisive and don't worry if other people say you are taking too many risks. Maybe you are, but life would be dull without them.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
Just because something worked well in the past does not mean it will work well in the future. In fact, now would be a good time to update your methods. You can afford to be adventurous today.

♊ Gemini

Do you stick with what you know or do you strike out in a new direction? You have never been one to be cautious and now, more than ever, you are inspired to be different.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Cancer is renowned for its caring nature and you will get no end of opportunities to show your concern over the next 24 hours. The world is a better place with you in it!

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
If you put your mind to it over the next two or three days, you can accomplish something that does your reputation a power of good. Those who were hoping to see you fail will be severely disappointed.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You cannot neglect your responsibilities. There are certain things that need to be done and it is your special duty to do them. In days, everyone will be singing your praises.

The most important thing today is that you are aware of the consequences of whatever action you choose to take. Once you make your choice it's unlikely you will get a chance to change it, so take your time.
